

Contents

Acknowledgments — VII

Introduction — 1

- What Is Autofiction? — 1
- Autofiction as the Narration of Sensitive Experience — 12
- Traumatic Experience — 15
- The Material on which the Research was Conducted — 18

Part I: Between Experience and Writing

Introductory Remarks — 23

1 Fiction as Framing of Experience — 25

- 1.1 The Birth of Autofiction — 26
- 1.2 Serge Doubrovsky's Autofiction: Psychoanalysis in the Service of Writing — 29
- 1.3 Autofiction around Serge Doubrovsky: Debates and the Evolution of the Concept — 36

2 The Turn to Authenticity — 41

- 2.1 Auto as Authenticity, Fiction as Productive Limitation — 41
- 2.2 Authenticity as the Philosophical Foundation of the Modern Self — 48

3 Autofiction, Crisis, and Narrative Identity — 51

- 3.1 Autobiography and Narrative Identity — 51
- 3.2 Autofiction and the Crisis of Identity — 56
- 3.3 Narrative Identity in Focus by Maria Stepanova — 60

Part II: Territories of the Sensitive

Introductory Remarks — 71

4 The Narrator as a Vulnerable Subject — 79

- 4.1 From Narcissism to Vulnerability — 79
- 4.2 The Concept of Vulnerability — 87
- 4.3 Narrative Representation of Vulnerability: "Narrating I" vs. "Experiencing I" — 90

- 5 Autofiction in the Hope of Empathy — 96
- 5.1 Reception without Empathy — 96
 - 5.2 Autofiction in the Light of the Ethical Turn — 99
 - 5.3 Narrative Empathy and Autofiction: Points of Convergence — 100
 - 5.4 Autofiction, Emotional Experience, and Immediacy — 105
- 6 Is Autofiction a Transgressive Genre? — 109
- 6.1 Transgression as Crossing the Boundary – Autofiction between the “Self” and the “Other(s)” – Boundaries of Self-Representation and Narrative Ethics — 110
 - 6.2 Transgression as (De)limiting of the Subject – Embodied Experience in Autofiction — 113
 - 6.3 Transgression as Orientation toward the Limit – Liminal Experience and its Representations in Autofiction — 118

Part III: The Narrativization of Trauma in Autofiction

Introductory Remarks — 125

- 7 Ways of Representing Trauma in Autofiction — 129
- 7.1 Trauma and Narrative — 129
 - 7.2 Trauma Narratives: Limitations of a Formal Approach — 133
 - 7.3 Raymond Federman, or the Courage of Narcissism — 138
- 8 Autofiction between Therapy and Performativity — 153
- 8.1 How is Autofiction Related to the Therapeutic Function? — 155
 - 8.2 The Therapeutic as Performative — 158
 - 8.3 The Therapeutic as Political — 160
- 9 Autofiction on Violence: The Ethics of Storytelling and the Symbolic Role of Language — 163
- 9.1 On the Problem of Representing Violence in Autofiction — 163
 - 9.2 Trauma vs. Violence in Autofiction — 165
 - 9.3 Shock, Sensation, and Empathy in Autofiction — 167
 - 9.4 History of Violence by Édouard Louis — 171

10	Cultural Trauma(s) in Russian-Language Autofiction — 179
10.1	Main Trends in Russian-Language Autofiction — 181
10.2	Autofiction and Cultural Trauma: Theoretical Perspectives — 183
10.3	Representing Collective Trauma(s) in Russian-Language Autofiction — 187
Part IV: Nostalgia for Immediacy
Introductory Remarks — 197
11	Autofiction and Photography: The “Ghost Image” from the First- Person Narrative — 205
11.1	The Production of Affect: Photography in The Years by Annie Ernaux and In Memory of Memory by Maria Stepanova — 210
11.2	Photography and Trauma: Wound by Oksana Vasyakina — 224
12	Autofiction and New Media: In Search of Immediacy Lost — 234
12.1	Immediacy, Witnessing, Authenticity — 234
12.2	Media that Alienate our Experience — 240
13	Conclusion — 245
Works Cited — 249
Index — 265	